In: The Covid-19 pandemic and its implications for private law and security [print] / ed. Josef Salač, reviewer: Miloš Lacko, Věra Štangová. - Prague: The Police Academy of the Czech Republic in Prague, 2021. pp. 15-33. ISBN 978-80-7251-528-8. Sign.: F 20694 [GAJDOŠOVÁ, Lucia] In the article, the author points out the issue of business and then reflects on selected areas of business in connection with COVID-19. Article is focused not only on theoretical, but also on selected application problems of entrepreneurs. An immanent part of the article is the processing of information on the establishment and subsequent dissolution of companies and trades for a predetermined time horizon. The reason for processing this part of the article is to find out whether in 2020, ie the year since we record COVID-19 in our territory, we detect a significant negative impact on the establishment and subsequent demise of companies and trades. According to the criteria of the Scientific Board of the Academy of the Police Force in Bratislava, which determine the classification of outputs, the work is a contribution of foreign scientific conference, so the author allowed herself to classify the output in category B.

It gives you a question that is not an exact answer and whether it is possible the conditional deferment of punishment by imprisonment with probation oversight subsumed under alternative punishments. Immanent part of the solution of this issue is the status of the person probation and mediation officers, which is an important element in the imposition of the this punishment. In connection with the processed issues, the author points marginally to the application practice in the intentions of court decisions. According to the criteria of the Scientific Board of the Academy of the Police Force in Bratislava, which determine the classification of outputs, the work is a contribution of a domestic scientific conference, so the author allowed herself to classify the output in category B.

The issue of alternative punishments is still highly topical, as, as shown by statistical indicators, they are not sufficiently used in practice. We think that the gradual changes in legislation and the elimination of possible deficits, which we also pointed out marginally in the article itself, can determine the overall more frequent imposition of alternative sanctions in practice. For example, de lege ferenda the change in the reporting of the statistical activity of judges in the conversion of an alternative sentence to an unconditional sentence of imprisonment, as well as the sufficient creation of conditions for the imposition of alternative sentences. We are aware that judges are independent in their decision-making activities ", i.e. j. it is not possible to "force" a judge to impose an alternative sentence on a convicted person. In our view, if sufficient conditions are created for the imposition of alternative punishments, there is no reason for judges to continue to "resort" to retributive justice. We would like to express the hope that a gradual change in the legislation will create such conditions for the imposition
